Kanaiwa Area

An Atmospheric Port Town, Built on a History of Maritime Trade

Kanaiwa flourished as a key port for maritime trade as far back as the Middle Ages. During the Edo period (1603–1868), it served as a port of call for the Kitamae trading ships, playing a crucial diplomatic role as the seaside gateway to the castle town of Kanazawa. Many of the old shipping wholesalers, machiya townhouses, and temples and shrines from back then are still around today, making a walk down the street feel almost like stepping back in time. The area has experienced growing popularity of late, for places like a restaurant specializing in Kanazawa's famous traditional miso, as well as for delicacies like seafood pickled in rice bran.

A Closer Look Neighborhoods with Ties to the Kitamae Trading Ships

Kanaiwa and Ono were port towns that served as trading centers for the Kitamae trading ships, and the birthplace of the wealthy merchant Zeniya Gohei, who was a major figure in the local economy. The area is rich with history and atmosphere, with the many narrow roads running to the port. In 2019, the historic townscapes and buildings of Kanaiwa and Ono received Japan Heritage designation.

Ono Area

A Picturesque Port Town, Fragrant with Soy Sauce Breweries

The port town of Ono was once a thriving center for both shipping and fishing. The techniques for making soy sauce were brought here from Kishu (now Mie and Wakayama) in the 17th century, and the local soy sauce has been a part of Kanazawa's food culture ever since. The streets here still enjoy a charming old-fashioned feel, lined with soy sauce breweries and machiya townhouses, and the Ono Ohashi Bridge offers a lovely view of the Onogawa River, the Ono Lighthouse, pine forests, and even the sacred Mt. Hakusan off in the distance. In recent years, some of the machiya townhouses have been converted into galleries and cafés, making Ono an even more appealing destination for visitors.

A Closer Look Neighborhoods Known for Fermented Foodstuffs

For centuries, Kanaiwa and Ono have been major producers of soy sauce and miso, and even today, these neighborhoods are full of fermented foods and ingredients. In particular. One is still full of sev sauce breweries, to such an extent that it is considered one of Japan's five major soy sauce producers. Soy sauce lovers come from around Japan to sample the mellow sweetness of the area's trademark umakuchi sov sauce.
